- 2000 Census allowed people to designate more than one race; 16,694 or 4.35% of Minneapolis population identified themselves as two or more races.
- 59.66% of the Black or African American population in the State of Minnesota resides in the Twin Cities: Minneapolis Black or African American population is double St. Paul's.
- American Indian/ Alaska Native and Hispanic/ Latino are more dispersed statewide with significant concentration in the northern portion.
- Minnesota's total minority population has doubled in size since 1990; 43.9% of Minnesota's total minority population reside in the Twin Cities.
- St. Paul's Asian population exceeds Minneapolis' by 8.3%.

Age

The population of Minneapolis is younger in 2000 compared to 1990. The median age in 2000 is 31.2 years and in 1990 was 31.5 years. Counts for the categories of "School Age," "Young Adult" and "Middle Age" have increased but other categories titled "Preschool", "Adult" and "Senior" experienced a decline from 1990 to 2000. Results of changes in the 2000 age distribution table indicate that school and classroom spaces are needed for the school age population.

The decrease of the adult (25-44 years old) population is not significant, less than 4,000 from 1990 census to 2000 census. However a significant increase in the middle age category (25.6 percent or 17,539 persons) and significant decline in the number of senior citizens (more than 12,800) indicated that the empty nesters were attracted to the City and chose to live in the City before they retired.

Source: 1990 and 2000 Census Data

Despite the relatively small overall increase in population (0.35 percent), the Calhoun-Isles community experienced a number of significant changes between 1990 and 2000.

During this period, the white population declined by 864 (-3.15 percent) but a noticeable increase in most of the non-white populations can be observed. The notable exception is the American Indian and Alaska Native population which experienced a decline of 30.80 percent. Calhoun-Isles community became more ethnically and racially diverse in 2000 with substantial growth of the Hispanic or Latino population and the Asian, Native Hawaiian and Other Pacific Islander population.

Source: 1990 and 2000 Census Data

The University community experienced a significant increase in total population between 1990 and 2000 and the community also became more racially and ethnically diverse during the same period. The white population declined by just over 1,000 people or 4.11 percent. The non-white population increased significantly and most noticeable is the large increase in the number of Black or African American people in the community (an increase of 2,100 people or 121.11 percent). Other significant increases can be witnessed in the other races and Hispanic or Latino population which increased by almost 97.45 percent.
